Developer Eric Blumenfeld broke ground at the project and plans to build condos with retail. The unique building, below, was built in 1892. / CHARLES MOSTOLLER

Divine Lorraine condo project moves forward

North Broad. The historic building is set for new condo development — but still has appeal for art lovers.

Hours after politicians and developers left the Divine Lorraine groundbreaking on Wednesday, a line of people two blocks long was still outside the building.

But these visitors weren't drawn to the historic structure on North Broad Street by the new condos that will be built there.

They were there to see a pop-up shop in the paint-chipped, shabby-chic lobby of the former hotel on North Broad Street, where a collection of Divine Lorraine-themed apparel and accessories by local designer Najeeb Sheikh were on sale.

More than 7,000 people RSVP'd to the pop-up shop event on Facebook, some waiting for more than an hour to get in, and around 5:30 p.m., people in line beyond a certain point were frustrated to find they were cut off.

To Caryn Kunkle, who has for five years been lobbying for state and city support to create the Philadelphia Interactive Museum of Contemporary Art inside the Divine Lorraine, that crowd shows the building's strongest attraction is to the artistic community of Philadelphia.

"What drew all the people today was art," she said. "High-end condos are not doing the Section 8 housing and the homeless shelter any favors, but a museum that has programs for the Section 8 residents and children ... would really build a bridge between the upper and lower classes."

But there are no set plans for an art institution. For now, developers Eric Blumenfeld and William Procida are moving forward with plans to put 109 condos and 20,000 square feet of ground-floor retail in the 10-story building.

Blumenfeld said before breaking ground on the project Wednesday that it was "the proudest day of my career."

"This building has a mystique, a spirit," he said. "It's an organism. It's alive. It has a heartbeat. Maybe it was hibernating for 15 years, but we're going to turn the lights on."

Kunkle, 33, who lives just blocks away, is in talks with Blumenfeld about finding space for her proposal. She said her vision — a museum and interactive arts space with room for multiple arts organizations — needs at least 100,000 square feet.

"They're not showing up to see the floor plan of the condos. They're showing up to see the artists' work in the lobby of the Divine Lorraine," she said of the hundreds who turned out Wednesday evening. "What that groundbreaking was celebrating was gentrification."

Local Carl Geter, 64, was positive on the condo project, although not on the impact it could have on parking locally.

"They needed to do something with it," he said. "Philadelphia has too many old buildings just sitting around."

A Philadelphia relic

The Divine Lorraine at Fairmount Avenue and Broad Street was named by Father Divine, a quasi-religious leader of the early 20th century who declared Philadelphia to be the capital of the world.

- Designed by architect Willis G. Hale and built in 1892, it was used for apartments and a hotel until 1948 when it was acquired by Father Divine, who renamed it the Divine Lorraine and turned it into the headquarters of his Divine Peace Mission Movement.
- The Movement sold the building in 1999.
- Since then it has sat unused, a popular target for graffiti artists.

Boyfriend charged with student's death

Police have made an arrest in the death of a 21-year-old Temple University student who was first thought to have killed herself.

The victim's boyfriend, Brandon Meade, 29, was arrested Tuesday on a warrant in an unrelated case at his home in Upper Darby after the medical examiner's office ruled that Agatha Hall's death could not have been a suicide.

Agatha Hall / PROVIDED

Police were called to Hall's first-floor apartment on the 2300 block of North Park Avenue just after midnight on Aug. 31, where they found Hall dead of a gunshot wound to the head.

A 9mm handgun was found under her body.

A police spokeswoman said Meade told officers that Hall shot herself in the head.

Hall majored in finance and also worked as a shift manager at Wawa, according to LinkedIn. She was a 2011 graduate of Northeast High School.

L&I's reform progress blasted by controller

Safety. The audit cites ongoing illegal demolitions, construction without permits, and building collapses.

Department of Licenses and Inspections Commissioner Carlton Williams should be fired, City Controller Alan Butkovitz said, because the department has not made enough progress on promised reforms.

"If you can't get imminently dangerous buildings knocked down, when you've had two years and nine months, then what are you doing that warrants your stewardship?" Butkovitz asked at a press conference Wednesday.

A new report by Butkovitz's office says that the department allowed trainees to perform inspections—despite lacking necessary certifications, and the department has failed to knock down dangerous abandoned buildings despite repeated warnings to do so.

After the collapse at a Center City demolition site killed six people, Mayor Michael Nutter promised sweeping reforms at the department.

But Butkovitz said illegal demolition, construction without permits and building collapses continue. And, he said, the department has remained uncooperative, forcing him to issue subpoenas to get information from the city agency.

A new computer system, announced in January 2014, has yet to be implemented, he said.

The Nutter administration countered with its own figures:

"The department, with support from the Mayor and Council, has dramatically increased the number of [imminently dangerous] building demolitions each year, reducing the stock from an average of about 600 to about 270. The department has increased clean and seals from 1,400 per year to 2,100 and we've inspected 13,000 vacant buildings, cited them where necessary and 36 percent of them have come into compliance without going to court," the administration said.

Even with the mayor's support, Williams' days at L&I could be numbered. Jim Kenney, the Democratic nominee for mayor, has said that he would replace Williams.

Philly's Songbird compe

Tait Gehman sings at the Songbird competition on Tuesday.
/CHARLES MOSTOLLER, METRO

So you think you can sing? Philly's version of American Idol is now in its fourth season.

This week kicks off the return of Philadelphia's largest local singing competition, "Songbird." The 14-week live performance showdown features twenty of the city's most hopeful vocal talents battling for the respected title and a $2,000 grand prize.

"It's really the only consistent singing competition this city has had in years and I seriously looked for talent all over Philly to represent," said creator Josh Schonewolf.

Schonewolf, who has been the executive producer of Songbird since its inception, wanted to launch an event that was solely based on "talent and unique personalities."

"I received over 300 audition videos this season and decided to only select 10 brand new contestants — each with their own sound and identity that will really make this competition special compared to others," Schonewolf said. "Given that we've been doing this for four years now, I felt that some other previous contestants deserved a shot again."

For the first time, the competition is split between two teams — the "newbies" vs. the "all-stars." It will be ten new contestants versus ten favorites from the past three seasons who are coming back for another shot at the title.

"It's a little intimidating at first, but I know that when I get on that stage I'm fearless," said newcomer Katie Haire.

Haire, 27, whose stage name is "Gin," initially dropped out after starting in the first season due to "being a first-time teacher."

"Justine" sings at the Songbird competition, founded by Josh Schonewolf, right, and now in its fourth season .

"I didn't realize how hectic my schedule was going to be once I signed on. Now that I'm more accustomed to my work/personal life … I'm ready to get on stage and rock out," Haire said.

"At first, I didn't want to come back because I felt as though I couldn't take on the pressure," Zach Deritis, 24, said of returning as an all-star.

etition kicks off

Known more commonly by the stage name "Zach Ryan," Deritis was a crowd favorite in season three before being cut during the semifinals round. Currently a Boxers PHL bartender/server, he now balances being a "part-time performer."

"Songbird really opened doors for me," Deritis said. "I'm constantly being booked for shows year-round, and my family and friends are what really pushed me to give it another shot."

The gatekeepers of whether or not anyone makes it further will be a panel of five local judges who come from various sectors of the entertainment industry. Unlike many other shows, the audience does not place a direct vote in the elimination of a contestant, only the judges.

"The competition this season is more fierce than ever and I'm looking for the full bookable, saleable package," said Danny Palmieri, who is the group sales manager at the Kimmel Center and one of the new season four judges.

An acclaimed cabaret performer who is also performing during the Papal visit this weekend, Palmieri, 31, knows "what it takes to succeed in the profession."

"For me, it's more than just the voice — you have to know how to convey a story and sense of performance through song. That's what Songbird is about."

Songbird is every Tuesday night at Tabu Bar (12th & Walnut) with doors opening at 8 p.m.

City Paper. The Fall Arts Guide, the Mutter Museum and more

This week's City Paper cover / CITY PAPER

In the cover story, City Paper looks to the future with the Fall Arts Guide. First, Bryan Bierman gets into a spirited discussion with Megan Rosenbloom, whose entertainingly macabre and morbidly informative Death Salon conference will haunt the Mutter Museum soon. Then the paper's resident experts in music, theater, dance and more pick their best bets for the upcoming season. You'll find seven calendars full of information that you can use as your guide for planning what to attend this fall.

In other highlights:

Staff writer Jerry Iannelli examines the questions that continue to surround a 2011 drug bust in which police give conflicting stories. City Paper obtained a copy of a police property receipt filed after the arrest, and finds even more inconsistencies than when the paper first reported on the case in June. One police officer was taken off the street following publication of that article.

Restaurant reviewer Adam Erace visits Whetstone Tavern, from the Brauhaus Schmitz team. The menu at the Bella Vista/Queen Village restaurant skews American — clam cakes, crab cakes, succotash — with some German cameos. A mostly well-curated beer and wine list rounds out the menu here.

Police in New York bust a synthetic marijuana drug ring

Cheap high. Low-income teens and the homeless are some of the most common users of the drugs.

Preet Bharara, the U.S. attorney for the Southern District of New York, speaks at a news conference. / GETTY IMAGES

Law-enforcement agents have arrested 6 people in New York accused of trafficking synthetic marijuana, an illegal drug that has sparked local health fears and led to a spike in hospitalizations and deaths this year, officials said on Wednesday.

A grand jury indicted 10 people accused of helping to import 220 pounds (100 kg) of illegal chemicals used to make the drug, which police say can cause hallucinations and give users superhuman strength. Six were arrested on Tuesday and the rest remain at large.

"Synthetic cannabinoids are a deadly serious problem that demands an equally serious response," Manhattan U.S. Attorney Preet Bharara said. "Today's collective action is just the start of that response, one that will not end until this poison in a packet no longer endangers our community."

The grand jury indicted Abdullah Deiban, Faris Kassim, Morad Kassim, Nageab Saeed, Walide Saeed, Mohomed Saeed, Hamid Moshref, Mohamed Salem, Mohamed Almatheel and Fikri Nagi on charges including unlawful importation and distribution of controlled substances.

The amount of the seized chemicals were enough to produce more than a quarter-million packets of synthetic marijuana, also known as "K-2" or "spice," police say.

The drug, a mix of smokable dried plants and chemicals that is sold illegally for as little as $2 a packet, has become a top drug of concern for New York police, Commissioner Bill Bratton said.

Between April 1 and July 31, more than 1,900 people were admitted to hospitals in New York State after taking the substance, which can lead to severe medical conditions including cardiac arrest, police said. REUTERS

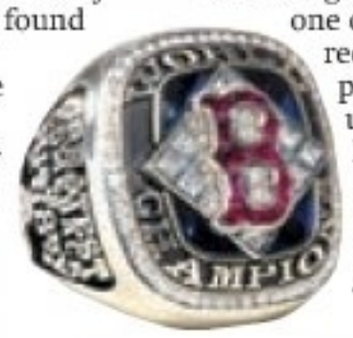
Boston. Drug search turns up missing World Series ring

When a team of Massachusetts police officers entered a suburban Boston home looking for drugs, they found a 2004 Red Sox World Series ring, officials said on Wednesday.

The officers had been watching a home in Quincy, south of Boston, on Tuesday afternoon when they saw Dennis Leclair, 47, allegedly selling oxycodone tablets to two men outside his building.

Police approached Leclair and arrested him before executing a search warrant on his home. When they entered, they found oxycodone tablets, police scanners, a money counting machine, more than $9,000 in cash and the World Series ring, police said.



Police said they are unsure how Leclair came to be in possession of the ring but said that it had been reported missing by a Red Sox employee.

Red Sox officials declined to comment, saying the investigation is continuing.

"It's bizarre," said a Quincy police dispatcher, who declined to provide his name. "Never seen something like that before."

Officers continue to investigate the ring, police said.

Leclair was charged with drug offenses and one count of receiving stolen property valued over $250. It was not immediately clear if he had yet retained an attorney.

Over a third of US kids and adults eat fast food daily

CDC. They cite childhood obesity as a serious problem in the United States.

Children having a meal at McDonalds. / GETTY IMAGES

On any given day in the United States, 34.3 percent of children and adolescents are consuming a significant portion of their daily nutrition from fast-food restaurants, the National Center for Health Statistics reported on Wednesday.

The NCHS said fast food "has been associated with higher caloric intake and poorer diet quality" in the 2-19 age group.

The Centers for Disease Control says the level of obesity is holding steady at about 17 percent and affecting about 12.7 million children and adolescents.

More than 12 percent of the children and adolescents surveyed got over 40 percent of their calories from fast food, which was defined as "restaurant fast food/pizza," according to the data brief from the NCHS, a unit of the CDC.

"It is certainly a significant amount and it would be more concerning if someone were not astonished by that number. It is a sign we have some work to do to help families come up with practical solutions," said Dr. Esther Krych, a pediatrician with the Mayo Clinic's Children's Center in Rochester, Minnesota.

Age

Kids aged 12-19 consumed twice the average daily percentage of calories from fast food than did younger children, the report said.

The NCHS said the data was extracted from the National Health and Nutrition Examination Survey, 2011-2012.

The ethnic group with the lowest daily consumption of fast food were non-Hispanic Asian children, at 8 percent. At the other end of the spectrum were non-Hispanic black children at 13.9 percent, followed by non-Hispanic white children at 13.1 percent and Hispanic children at 11.2 percent. REUTERS

Hungarian riot police fire tear gas at migrants

HUNGARIAN RIOT POLICE FIRE PEPPER SPRAY AND WATER CANNONS AS THEY REPEL AN ATTEMPT BY MIGRANTS TO BREAK THE BORDER POST GATE AND PULL DOWN THE RAZOR WIRE FENCE. /ALL PHOTOS BY GETTY IMAGES

HUNGARIAN POLICE USE PEPPER SPRAY AGAINST REFUGEES AT THE HORGOS BORDER, NEAR THE TOWN OF KANJIZA, AFTER HUNGARIAN AUTHORITIES CLOSED THEIR BORDER WITH SERBIA.

A CHILD CRIES AFTER BEING HIT BY TEAR GAS SPRAYED BY HUNGARIAN ANTI-RIOT POLICE.

Riot police fired water cannon and tear gas on Wednesday at migrants demanding to be let through Hungary's newly shut EU frontier, while refugees at other Balkan frontiers clambered through cornfields in search of new routes. Hungary's decision this week to shut the European Union's external border with Serbia was the most forceful attempt yet by a European country to reduce the flow of refugees and economic migrants overwhelming the bloc. The move has left thousands of migrants scattered across the Balkan peninsula seeking alternative ways to reach the EU, and Hungary's prime minister said his country planned to erect a fence along parts of its border with Croatia as well as on the frontier with Romania to stem the flow. Helmeted Hungarian riot police backed by armored vehicles took up positions at the now-barricaded border crossing with Serbia, where male migrant youths pelted them with stones, demanding to be allowed through. Five things you need to know

1 Firefighters gain ground on California wildfire

Property losses from a deadly Northern California wildfire, the most destructive this year in the western United States, climbed on Tuesday to at least 585 homes and hundreds of other structures that have gone up in flames.

The latest tally, up from Monday's estimate of 400 homes razed, came as firefighters gained some ground against the blaze, which erupted on Saturday and raced through several communities in the hills north of Napa County's wine-producing region.

Thousands of residents were forced to flee, many without warning as neighborhoods burned around them. One elderly shut-in was later discovered to have perished in her home, and authorities have not ruled out finding additional victims.

An estimated 13,000 residents remained displaced by evacuations, while the blaze, dubbed the Valley Fire, still posed a potential threat to some 9,000 buildings in the fire zone, roughly 50 miles west of Sacramento, the state capital. REUTERS

2 Oklahoma court issues last-minute halt of Glossip execution

An Oklahoma appeals court halted the planned execution of a convicted murderer, delaying his lethal injection for two weeks so it can consider evidence the inmate's lawyers say points to his innocence.

The court's decision came about three hours before the state planned to execute Richard Glossip.

"Due to Glossip's last-minute filing, and in order for this Court to give fair consideration to the materials included with his subsequent application for post-conviction relief, we hereby grant an emergency stay of execution for two weeks," it said. REUTERS

3 Taxis jam Brussels in Uber protest

Hundreds of taxis from across Europe jammed central Brussels on Wednesday in protest against the driver-hailing app Uber, closing tunnels and disrupting commuters' journeys.

Taxis drove slowly through the Belgian capital toward Schuman roundabout, which houses the European Union institutions, stopping at major intersections on the way and blocking two main routes.

Transport union FGTB-UBT said taxis, hailing from France, Britain, Switzerland, Spain and Portugal, took part in the protest. REUTERS

4 NC police chief ousted after criticism of Black Lives Matter

A North Carolina police chief said he was forced to retire after he described the Black Lives Matter movement as "an American-born terrorist group" in a post on his personal Facebook page.

The town council in Surf City approved Police Chief Mike Halstead's retirement during an emergency meeting.

In a 662-word "open letter from a police chief" on Sept. 3, Halstead wrote that "this Black Lives Matter group is nothing more than an American-born terrorist group brought on by the lie of the hands up, don't shoot during the criminal thug Michael Brown incident." REUTERS

5 Mosquitoes may live long and prosper in warming Arctic

Rising temperatures at the top of the world may be bad news for Arctic denizens such as polar bears, but good news for the local mosquitoes, pesky bloodsuckers that prosper with warmer weather.

Researchers said on Tuesday that increasing temperatures were enabling Arctic mosquitoes to grow more quickly and emerge sooner from their pupal stage, greatly expanding their numbers and menacing the caribou whose blood they eat.

The findings illustrate the complex and unpredictable consequences of climate change, particularly in sensitive regions like the Arctic. REUTERS

Lawsuit. Microsoft discriminated against women in pay, promotions

Microsoft Corp. on Wednesday was hit with a proposed class-action lawsuit in U.S. court claiming its policy of ranking employees to determine pay and promotions led to discrimination against women.

The lawsuit was filed in federal court in Seattle by former technician Katherine Moussouris, who claims she was passed over for promotions given to less-qualified men and was told supervisors did not like her "manner or style."

Redmond, Washington-based Microsoft gives employees numerical rankings based on performance evaluations, according to the lawsuit, and routinely gave female workers lower ratings based on subjective criteria.

"Microsoft systematically undervalues the efforts and achievements of its female technical employees," said Adam Klein of well-known employment law firm Outten & Golden in New York, one of the firms representing Moussouris.

Microsoft currently has about 117,000 employees. / GETTY IMAGES

The global technology company did not immediately respond to a request for comment.

Microsoft CEO Satya Nadella last year was criticized for suggesting at an industry conference that women in technology jobs should not ask for pay raises and should have faith that their companies will compensate them fairly. He later apologized, but also maintained that the company paid men and women equally.

Wednesday's lawsuit appeared to be the first of its kind filed against Microsoft. REUTERS

Apple won't release watchOS 2

Apple said it won't release watchOS 2, an updated operating system for the Apple Watch, this week as planned after it discovered a bug in development. The updated operating system is designed to help users customize their watch and allow apps to load faster. Apple limited the availability of the Apple Watch earlier this year after a component supplied by a Chinese company was found to be defective, the Wall Street Journal reported in April. REUTERS

Senators ask automakers for details on cybersecurity

Two U.S. senators have asked the world's biggest automakers for information on steps they have taken to protect cars from being hacked, as attention on vehicle security has surged following the first car recall over a cyberbug.

Democratic Senators Edward Markey and Richard Blumenthal wrote to 18 automakers on Wednesday asking about efforts taken to secure vehicles including 2015 and 2106 models. They asked automakers how they test electronic components and communications systems to ensure attackers cannot gain access to onboard networks.

Concerns about auto cybersecurity have grown since July, when researchers gained remote control of a moving Jeep. REUTERS

1 Lady Gaga weighs in on the presidential race

A video of Lady Gaga arriving at LAX has surfaced online, and in it the pop star lets us all know what she really thinks of Republican presidential candidate and billionaire New Yorker Donald Trump. "Hey, Gaga, are you a Donald Trump fan?" a pushy TMZ-type photographer asks. Gaga simply cackles in response.

"Gaga, so that's a no? Is that right? On Donald Trump? Is that a no?" the photographer asks again as the singer simply responds with a closed mouth smile into the camera.

When asked who she does like, Gaga quickly shouts out, "Hillary!" So if you were waiting for a sign from Gaga as to which candidate to support, there you go. MATT LEE

2 Bieber wipes out in hotel lobby

You might find this hard to believe, but the Biebs was making a scene, this time at the fancy downtown L.A. JW Marriott, tearing up the lobby on his skateboard — at least, that is, until he totally ate it on the marble floor. "He alarmed everyone when he rode his skateboard through the hotel's lobby," a source tells Life & Style. "Then he wiped out and took a bad spill. It was hilarious, and everyone was laughing at him." And that's not all! Miffed about people getting a kick out of his less-than-impressive skills, Bieber stormed out to his waiting Ferrari and peeled out of there. Like a man. "He was so amped up he almost crashed through the exit's mechanical arm," the source adds. "It was pretty stupid of him."

3 Naomi Campbell frees her nipple

Naomi's more covered up here.

Naomi Campbell, the supermodel who has never been one to shy away from controversy, posted a topless picture of herself on Instagram. Just so you know. The post has garnered more than 60,000 likes in only 14 hours. Instagram has a notorious history of taking down pictures of topless women who aren't breastfeeding, and many celebrities have protested this by sharing topless and nearly topless pictures of themselves. The only question remaining is will Instagram dare take down a picture of Naomi Campbell? They better hope she doesn't have her phone in her hands if and when they do. MATT LEE

4 About Steve Rannazzisi's 9/11 story

This is a big week for 9/11-related apologies. First Adrian Grenier for his Iraq tweet, then the guy from Devo for his terrible wedding reception. And now this: "The League" star Steve Rannazzisi is sorry for lying about being in one of the Twin Towers on 9/11. Yikes. "As a young man, I made a mistake that I deeply regret and for which apologies may still not be enough," Rannazzisi posted to Twitter. "After I moved with my wife to Los Angeles from New York City in 2001 shortly after 9/11, I told people that I was in one of the World Trade Center towers on 9/11. It wasn't true. I was in Manhattan but working in a building in midtown and I was not at the Trade Center on that day. I don't know why I said this. This was inexcusable. I am truly, truly sorry. For many years, more than anything, I have wished that, with silence, I could somehow erase a story told by an immature young man. It only made me more ashamed. How could I tell my children to be honest when I hadn't come clean about this? It is to the victims of 9/11 and to the people that love them — and the people that love me — that I ask for forgiveness. It was profoundly disrespectful to those who perished and those who lost loved ones. The stupidity and guilt I have felt for many years has not abated. It was an early taste of having a public persona, and I made a terrible mistake."

Steve Rannazzisi is very sorry.

Albert Hammond Jr. gets introspective on 'Momentary Masters'

Interview. The Strokes guitarist talks about trading a hedonistic lifestyle for something a little more domestic.

When The Strokes guitarist Albert Hammond Jr. compares his first two solo albums to his new release, "Momentary Masters" (which came out July 31), he says he can't even recognize the person who made the first two. "Luckily, I still like the songs, though," he jokes.

Hammond has undergone some major changes in the past few years. For one, he's sober now. He also got married and bought a house upstate. "I thought it would be more shocking, but it's not," he says of leaving New York City. "I thought I might miss it more, but I don't. I make food, I exercise, I practice and do some work. Then I just have time to myself, working on the land or the house. It's nice."

It's not the length of life, but the depth

"Momentary Masters" is dedicated to a woman named Sarah Jones, who passed away two weeks after Hammond became friends with her. "She wrote a Richard Pryor joke on Instagram and no one knew it was [about] Richard Pryor," he says. "I wrote one back. She's a friend of friends, so we just ran into each other and had an eight-hour conversation outside the park."

Hammond says they talked every day for the next two weeks and when he finished the album, he really wished he could play it for her. "Dedicating the album to her was my way of playing it for her," he says.

Pushing harder than ever before

While "Momentary Masters" does explore big themes, such as morality and purpose, the lyrics are more metaphorical than literal. "'Born Slippery' is about looking at the clouds and picking up on the warmth that can be found, and also the idea that 'this too shall pass' and even if you're in a certain spot doesn't mean it's going to last forever," Hammond says, explaining the first track on the album. While he says all the recent changes in his life did influence the album, the themes are ideas he thinks anyone can relate to.

Albert Hammond Jr. says working on the new album meant pushing himself into uncomfortable territory.
JASON MCDONALD

He says making the album was both exhausting and therapeutic. "Sure, it can be draining sometimes, but it can also be tremendously invigorating when you're going just 100 miles per hour with ideas," he says. Hammond says he really pushed himself on this album, forcing himself to try things that made him uncomfortable.

"Everything from playing harder to singing a little out of range, and also keeping the energy [throughout] the record," he says. "When you push yourself like that, at the end you can say, 'Come check this thing out. I think it's awesome and it deserves attention.'"

Doctor, traveler, soldier, coward

Sci-fi. "Doctor Who" showrunner Steven Moffat wonders if the Time Lord is running from his past — or himself.

Peter Capaldi returns as the Doctor in the ninth season of "Doctor Who," premiering Saturday at 9 p.m. on BBC America. / BBC

Time is not Steven Moffat's friend. When we caught up with the "Doctor Who" (and "Sherlock") showrunner last month to talk about the sci-fi series' ninth season, he was still writing it. "I'm writing the Christmas episode of 'Doctor Who,'" he says. "Whenever I go on holiday, wherever I am, sitting in an airport or car service, [writing] has been my fate."

As for his time-traveling lead character, the Doctor has plenty of his own troubles to contend with. He regained his companion, Clara (Jenna Coleman), but lost his missing home-world of Gallifrey (again), so finding that is on the agenda — when he gets to it between adventures. Not to mention the fact that his longtime rival returned as a woman. We chatted with Moffat about what's complicated and not in the world of "Doctor Who."

Will finding Gallifrey be the priority this season?
It's out there, and it's the back of the Doctor's mind. I'm bloody curious about the Doctor's nostalgia for Gallifrey, because we all know he ran away from it 'cause he found it so boring. So what happens if he finds it? He takes one look out the TARDIS door and says, 'Nah,' and takes off again. But we always miss home when we can't get to it, I guess that's the thing. He's never going to have a single quest, the Doctor — he wants to have lunch with as many famous people as he can and go to the fairgrounds and have a nice ride in a train — that's what the Doctor's like, he's got attention deficit disorder, racing around trying to entertain himself and have fun with Clara. That's what he wants, that's his mission.

Any significance to the gender-swap of his rival, the Master, to Missy?
It's the same character; there's just been a radical change. I don't think Time Lords really mind about that sort of thing, and the Doctor doesn't react at all when the Master reveals herself, he never even queries it. He knows perfectly well that it can happen in a regeneration. Maybe it doesn't happen very often — [laughs] here's me talking about the science of regeneration — a given Time Lord is mostly male and occasionally becomes female, or is mostly female and occasionally becomes male.

Dreams and feelings were big themes last season. Is this Doctor less afraid to look inside himself?
I think the Doctor is always worried about that. One of the things I find interesting about him is what he's really like compared to what everybody thinks he is. He has this great aspiration to be this man known as the Doctor who does the right thing and is never cruel and never cowardly — but we watch the show. We know that he's frail, and he can be vain and he can be a bit up himself. It's all the frailties that make him interesting. He's just somebody whose compassion is so boundless that when he encounters cruelty or tyranny, he can't help but fight it. But he's always a passerby, and he always becomes the last man standing. But that's not his agenda, he's not in his head a hero.

Does that tie into why he disliked Clara's boyfriend Danny, who was a soldier?
All loathing is self-loathing; that's a truth about everybody. He's so horrified that he's actually got to be a hugely effective soldier that he derides someone for being sort of like him. He's always saying, "I'll never carry a gun — so what, you blow up planets!" Where do you draw the line, what shape is that line you're drawing? It's moral nonsense.

Does the Doctor ever evaluate his past?
He keeps on the move for that reason. He's not a big fan of sticking around for the consequences, is he? He'll depose the government; he won't set up a new one. I think he runs, not an untypical reaction: Just keep moving, don't think about it. The past is so long, if he sat there and thought of it — all the people he's lost and all the things he's done — he'd have time for nothing else. I always find it very hard when he has to talk to one of his old companions, 'cause I think he can't — it'd be too destructive for him, too awful to start talking about that.

GETTY IMAGES

One more thing

Do you engage with the fandom directly online?

I don't go on forums and stuff because that could be very unpleasant for me. But there's also some beautiful work being done. I like sometimes going on YouTube, actually, to see what they've been up to. My own television career is a result of getting excited about "Doctor Who" as a kid, so I take great satisfaction and joy in the fact that it still happens, that our audience doesn't passively consume — it actively engages and makes things.

Let's settle the "Sherlock" crossover question.
The problem with crossing over "Doctor Who" is the impact you have on the other show. If you actually did the Doctor meets Sherlock Holmes — which will not happen — then where's Sherlock at the end of that? He's just learned there is intelligent life in the universe, and time travel is possible — he must now factor that into any deduction he makes.

Elisabeth Moss and Alex Ross Perry on teaming up

Interview. The star and the director of "Queen of Earth" praise the glories of collaboration.

In "Queen of Earth," at the PFS Theater starting Friday, Elisabeth Moss plays a woman unraveling. / IFC FILMS

Elisabeth Moss only had a supporting turn in "Listen Up Philip," last year's dark comedy about a suddenly unpleasant writer (Jason Schwartzman). But it didn't take long for her and filmmaker Alex Ross Perry to reunite — and with a bigger role. In "Queen of Earth," Moss plays Catherine, who, reeling from a breakup, heads off for some R&R with a friend (Katherine Waterston) at a summer home. There she gets worse.

Elisabeth, you're a producer on this — your first such gig. How did that go?

Elisabeth Moss: What was cool for me was being involved from the very beginning, which has never happened before, and having a say in some stuff. I had a voice that was heard and listened to. It was the first time I ever watched the first cut of something and the first time I gave notes. I was like, "They're not going to listen to anything; it's probably stupid." [Laughs] But they took two of the notes, right?

Alex Ross Perry: Two of the three!

Moss: And that made me feel really good. People always say, "It was such a collaboration." But that's sometimes bulls—. This was a real collaboration.

"Listen Up Philip" was very dialogue-driven whereas "Queen of Earth" is filled with lots of silences. The screenplay seems like it was filled with gaps to be plugged in by the actors.

Perry: That's very accurate. The script was not an outline, but it was my version of an outline — by someone who compulsively overwrites. There's an outline for a scene, but the outline is four-and-a-half pages, and the scene is three minutes. All the discussions we would have on set make it more than it could be if I just made it up on my own and forced people to memorize it.

Moss: There would be a paragraph that was almost like a little part of a novel, and it would be lovely to read. It would be what she was feeling or what was happening in the scene and what was happening in her head.

The way this is shot is very interesting. Elisabeth, are you an actor who thinks a lot about where the camera is?

Moss: I appreciate it in the sense that I do like to visualize what it's going to look like. I do have an appreciation of cinema, so I like to know what kind of film I'm fitting into. On "Listen Up Philip," Alex would talk about leaving the camera on an actor who's not talking while the other actors walk in and out of the room. It was always about moving. This was easier in a way, because I tend to be a very still actor. I tend not to like to move much. [Laughs]

Perry: Your suggestion is often, "What if I did this scene under the blanket?"

Moss: [Laughs] Either that or my suggestion is, "What if I'm sitting down?" Sitting in scenes is very important to me. I could even like to lay down a lot of the time. But I fit in a little bit better with Alex and [the cinematographer's] way of shooting this film, which is in a very specific way. It's a little more my style of acting. I like to be very still.

Shirtless. Liam Hemsworth is okay with objectification.

Being the romantic lead in a film comes with certain obligations, but Liam Hemsworth is up to the task of being a little objectified. A pivotal scene in "The Dressmaker" — which premiered at the Toronto International Film Festival this week — involves the Australian "Hunger Games" star removing his shirt to the ogling delight of co-stars Kate Winslet and Judy Davis. Nice work if you can get it.

They're really pushing your shirt-removing scene in the trailer.
Yeah, I just feel like that scene was… Look, I don't want to just take off my shirt for anything, but it felt like that was a good comedic moment to have. It was done in a quirky, funny way, not where I was taking it off to be sexy or that sort of cliched way.

Are you OK with this kind of objectification?
It's a nice break for the actresses out there. I'll take it over for them. I'll take some of that objectification. [Laughs]

Back at the Comic-Con press conference for "Hunger Games," did you see Jennifer Lawrence making a jerking-off motion during one of your heartfelt responses?
No, but that happens a lot in interviews. She's one of my best friends, and any chance she gets she'll give you s— behind your back or to your face. We were doing press in L.A. the other day and … Josh [Hutcherson] had literally been talking for a minute or so — very serious and heartfelt — and at the end of it Josh looked to Jen, and Jen wasn't listening at all. She's like, "Oh, I'm sorry, I was thinking about my dog singing the Dixie Chicks song."

Liam Hemsworth and Kate Winslet star in "The Dressmaker." / TIFF

She has no filter.
Literally no filter. I feel like it's getting worse by the day. At some point it's going to … [Cringes]

Someone suggested it's all an act, which would make it the most authentic performance ever.
Yeah, if it is then give her another Oscar. Give her another 10 Oscars. [Laughs]

Have you finished filming "Independence Day 2"?
Yeah, we finished shooting two weeks ago. … [To] be able to continue that story from such an iconic film 20 years later is great.

Working it at New York Fashion Week

DKNY's new #girlboss

The show took place inside the World Trade Center's striking Oculus structure.

TINA CHADHA
@TinaatMetro
tina.chadha@metro.us

It's a new era at DKNY. In June, Donna Karan, a pioneer in power dressing, announced that she was stepping down as chief designer from Donna Karan International, the iconic label she started in 1984. Meanwhile, little-sister brand DKNY — synonymous with NYC and the go-getters who run (and party in) this town — was getting a new creative force.

And who better than Dao-Yi Chow and Maxwell Osborne of the haute streetwear label Public School? After all, the buzzy, award-winning New York natives are at the forefront of defining how urbanites want to dress today. So how did they do?

Whether they were paying homage to Karan's sportswear-for-the-executive-suite legacy (she was cheering on front row!) or just refining their own pared-down androgynous aesthetic, Chow and Osborne sent out looks for a #girlboss.

Each model walked out in some variation on sharp pinstripe suiting: from the standard menswear-inspired double-breasted jacket to a deconstructed blazer-come-dress over tailored shorts. Though the sheer lace dresses that closed the show were more bedroom than boardroom.

Despite the few daring looks, we're interested to see Chow and Osborne step out of their comfort zone next season.

Yeezy's long con

Kanye West dropped his new clothing line — and single! — at Fashion Week on Wednesday. Here's what went down.

Kanye made Kendall sit second row

Poor Kendall Jenner sat behind the rest of the fam, presumably to make room for more glamorous VIPs 2 Chainz, Courtney Love, Lorde and Seth Meyers.

Kim and North wore matching leggings

And then North sat on the floor, next to Anna Wintour, who must have been thrilled.

The collection looked ... very familiar

Drab hoodies with holes, flesh-colored leotards, oversized parkas … When we saw the first images, we thought they were #TBTs of Yeezy's February show. They were not. Though there were some updates: One model smoked a cigarette on the runway!

But that made it kind of genius

Hey, lots of designers recycle the same looks — many more of them copy others. West is just more flagrant about it, turning it into a spectacle that we will drop everything to witness. He knows what he's doing. RAQUEL LANERI

Aries It will be hard to focus on one task. Limit distractions and keep plugging away until the job is done. Once finished, you'll feel satisfied.

Taurus Utilize your skill and training to the utmost. Find an innovative way to diversify to better suit the changing economic climate.

Gemini Play by the rules, and don't toy with someone's feelings. What you see as harmless flirtation will be misinterpreted.

Cancer Change is inevitable. You can fight what's coming or you can embrace it wholeheartedly. Choose to make your life simpler.

Leo You will feel vulnerable and have a tendency to overreact. Don't start off on the wrong foot by making assumptions that aren't based on facts.

Virgo There is a limit to what you can do on your own. Listen to someone with experience. An older friend will be key to resolving your problems.

Libra Travel or communication delays will be unnerving. Don't let minor issues distract you from your goal. Don't pass up a chance to take a trip.

Scorpio Emotional issues will surface, but you mustn't let them interfere with your productivity. Seek the help of a trusted friend or adviser.

Sagittarius You may feel stuck or stagnant. Spending time and effort on your appearance or wardrobe will lift your spirits and boost your confidence.

Capricorn Spread your good will around. A charitable or benevolent agency will benefit greatly if you offer your services.

Aquarius It's possible that in the heat of the moment you have hurt the feelings of a loved one. It would be best to make amends.

Pisces You have to pace yourself. Rely on your instincts to tell you which way to turn. Don't be surprised if an old friend wants to reconnect. EUGENIA LAST

WHERE TO EAT, DRINK & PLAY

Make a night of it

Head north to South for seasonal food, live jazz and Mint Julep beer.

RACHEL VIGODA
rachel.vigoda@metro.us

Those of us who miss Zanzibar Blue, rejoice! Restaurateurs (and brothers) Robert and Benjamin Bynum are opening up a restaurant/bar/music venue that echoes the "all-in-one" concept of the closed Broad Street spot. But for this one, they're heading north — and calling it South.

The new South, in the former Route 6 space at 600 N. Broad St., opens tomorrow with a "cheffed up" Southern-style menu from Louisiana native Paul Martin, moving over from the Bynums' Heirloom; nightly chef's counter seatings; a list of whiskeys 50 deep; and live music six nights a week in the 75-seat jazz parlor.

We talked to Robert Bynum about what we have to look forward to, and the misery of hunting for parking.

There's so much happening around North Broad right now. Do you see South as a neighborhood spot?

We really see Fairmount as the northern edge of Center City, with all the other restaurants and developments that are happening in this part of town. It's the final extension of the Avenue of the Arts North.

Will the three spaces at South — the bar, the restaurant, the jazz venue — be separate?

It's most closely related to Zanibar Blue; it's a natural continuation of what we were doing there, where all three aspects are in different locations. Some people will come in and have a drink at the bar, then go into the dining room and have a nice dinner, and then go over to the jazz parlor and have dessert or just enjoy the music. Or people will come in and just go to the bar, just come to hear music.

Who will be playing in the jazz parlor?

We're bringing in national artists, similar to what we were doing at Zanzibar Blue. We're doing music six nights a week, so we're a true jazz venue committed to the music. And we're committed to the local artists, too.

What can we expect from the menu?

We're calling it new Southern cuisine. We've done soul food at Warmdaddy's and Relish, but this isn't soul food — it's an upscale, more contemporary version of Southern food. Seasonality will be important to us. Fresh, farm-to-table items. We expect it to interest people who usually don't like Southern cuisine because it's heavy and somewhat unhealthy. This will be the type of food where you can enjoy those flavors, and also be able to eat it every night.

South sounds like a place you could easily make a whole night out of it.

That's very much part of the concept. Instead of going out to dinner and then looking for a place to go afterwards to hear music, getting back in your car, finding another parking space, this is an opportunity to make a full night of it — without having to face the realities of finding a new parking space in Center City later in the night, when everything is taken because everyone is out, or paying for another parking garage.

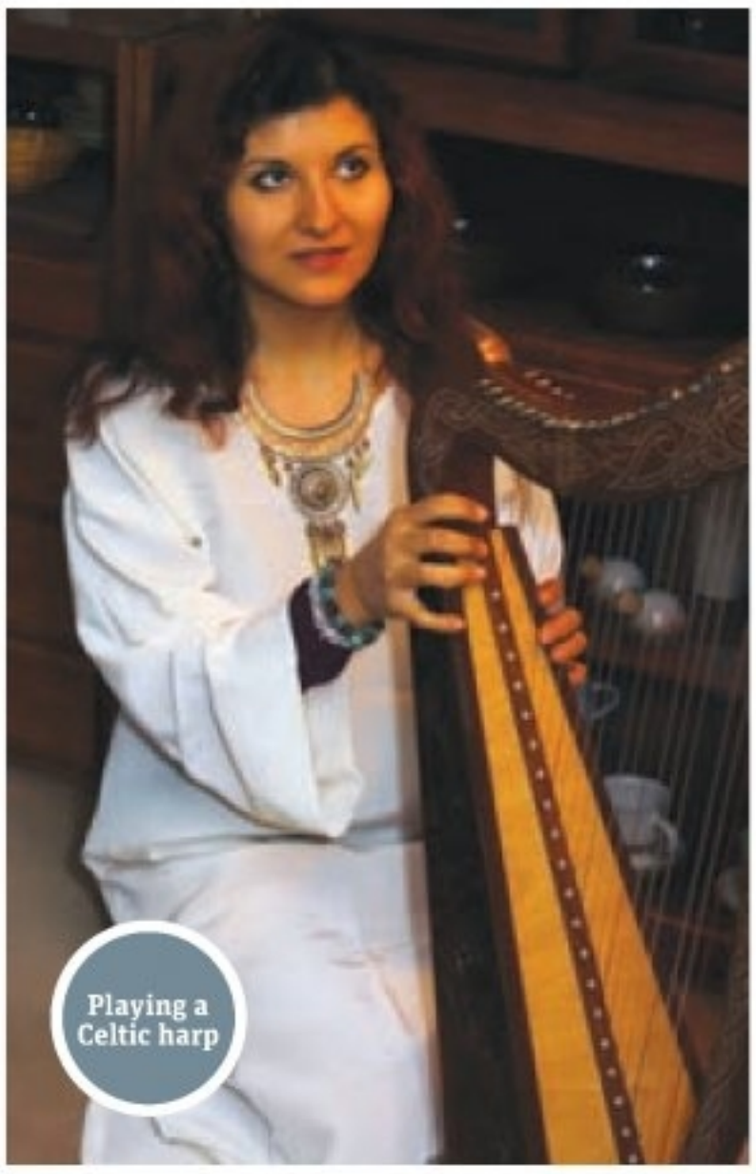
Cape Breton's Celtic colors

ALL PHOTOS SHUTTERSTOCK



Playing a Celtic harp

If you thought "Celtic colors" were limited to Ireland's famous 40 shades of green, think again.

For nine days each October, you can add vibrant shades of red, orange and yellow, as one of the most beautiful islands in the world reveals some of the best leaf-peeping in North America, coupled with the sound of fiddles and bagpipes, accordions and guitars, singing voices and dancing feet.

Cape Breton Island, on Canada's east coast, is home to a unique combination of music and culture, inspired by 19th-century settlers from Scotland and Ireland and influenced by the aboriginal Mi'kmaq people. The Celtic Colours International Festival is a celebration of this culture and, over its 19 years, has become one of Canada's premiere musical events. Both the lineup and the audiences reflect its international appeal, but the welcome and hospitality are pure Nova Scotia.

Communities all around Cape Breton host concerts, workshops, dances, storytelling and other events in venues ranging from state-of-the-art performance facilities to community halls and churches.

Many of the world's finest Celtic performers are on the bill along with exciting new names, but this festival is not all about headliners — there's interaction too: Bring your instrument and head for one of the sessions where everyone plays together just for fun. Get a taste of island life at a community supper with music and dancing; meet up with other festival-goers at the nightly Festival Club; take a guided hike through stunning landscapes painted with autumn hues, or sign up for a workshop. It might just be the most fun you ever had.

The festival runs Oct. 9–17. For tickets and more information, visit www.celtic-colours.com, or call 1-902-567–300 or 1-888-355–7744 (toll-free).

The coolest small town in America

Earning that name in a national poll, Berlin, Maryland, is a Victorian charmer you've seen in the movies, with a lively vibe, great shopping and fun events.

"Runaway Bride" and "Tuck Everlasting" have both been filmed in this quaint town. The turn-of-the-century ambiance with gaslights and gilt lettering on shop windows almost requires that the businesses be skewed toward one-off specialty shops, boutiques, antiques stores, galleries and artist co-ops.

The Atlantic Hotel is the centerpiece, a Victorian classic that's been lovingly restored. Drummer's Cafe is the onsite restaurant. The Globe was once the movie palace. It takes "dinner and a movie" literally by showing classic films on a small screen while patrons dine.

There are two festivals over Sept. 17-20. Paint Berlin Plein Air invites artists to capture the town on canvas, while the Fiddlers' Convention (Sept. 18-20) features professional and amateur artists entertaining and competing.

Falcon fined

Moore fined for big hit

It was a huge hit, and one that nearly sidelined Eagles wide receiver Jordan Matthews. Wednesday the NFL announced it was fining Atlanta's William Moore $23K for the helmet-to-helmet blow. "I just took a hard hit but at the end of the day that's just football," Matthews said.

Kelly, Eagles glad they're not facing Bryant

NFL. The Eagles caught a break as Dallas wideout Dez Bryant is expected to miss 4-8 weeks with a broken foot.

The Eagles had a few instances of bad luck in their tight loss to the Falcons Monday night.

But as they continue to game plan for their Week 2 opponent, there is a little luck on their side. They'll face Big D sans their best wide receiver, Dez Bryant.

"He's a hell of a player," former Bryant teammate DeMarco Murray said. "They have a lot of weapons on that side of the ball and they'll find ways to get the guys the ball. They have a pretty good QB there, a tight end, a couple receivers. They will be fine."

Murray isn't wrong. Dallas may be without the three-time 1,200+-yard receiver (who also had 16 touchdowns in 2014), but they still have Tony Romo. And Jason Witten. More than enough to challenge the Eagles' defense.

"It's not just Dez is out and another receiver comes in," Chip Kelly said, explaining that Bryant's absence creates a large unknown as they prepare defensively. "They don't have to do that. They can move [Cole] Beasley outside, they can play with Terrence Williams and two tight ends."

So would Kelly prefer to prepare for Bryant, or for an offense that could surprise him and his coaching staff with their Dez-less formations?

"He's really good," Kelly said. "Put a little bit more on the coaches and a little less covering Dez, I think we'll take that."

It's a relief for Byron Maxwell and the Eagles' shaky secondary — a unit that allowed Atlanta's stud pass-catcher Julio Jones to compile 141 yards and two touchdowns in Monday's 26-24 setback.

Dallas will also be without one of their top defenders Sunday (in addition to the suspended Greg Hardy), as Orlando Scandrick is expected to miss the entire season with a torn ACL.

"I think they have a really good secondary," Jordan Matthews said. "The rest of those guys, they can go out and play. [Brandon] Carr is good on the outside and [Morris] Claiborne has an opportunity with Scandrick out. [Tyler] Patmon is good. I think it will be a good challenge for us but I think we're ready for it."

Quoted

"It's really unfortunate about Scandrick. He went down with that season-ending injury and if you want to be able to beat the best you have to go up against the best."

Does NFC East rivalry matter to the players?

NFL. The Eagles remain steadfast that Dallas game is just another game ... well, most of them anyway.

Historically, the Eagles and Cowboys have trouble playing nice together. / GETTY IMAGES

If the Eagles lose Sunday their 0-2 record will have them two games back in the NFC East right off the bat. It's a no-brainer, this game means a lot.

But does it mean any more than any other game? Conventional wisdom says yes — it is DeMarco Murray and Miles Austin's old team, after all. And it's against the team from Sam Bradford's old stomping grounds. It's also arguably the team's biggest rival.

But this is a Chip Kelly team, and the temperament of the players following their first practice since their Monday loss says differently. Even if it is the home opener.

"They beat us on our field and we beat them on their field [last year]," Kelly said. "We hope we can beat them this time on our field. Every game is a must-win, so it's not added motivation. We have to go play a really good Dallas team; whether it's in Dallas or here it's a good football team."

For Murray, who led the NFL in rushing in 2014 with over 1,800 yards, it's really no big deal. But then again, nothing really is for such an even-keeled guy.

"I think DeMarco is a very grounded individual," Kelly said, "He's consistent in his approach every day that he's here. He's not an up-and-down guy. He's been fine. I haven't seen any change in him because it's Dallas week and he played for Dallas."

"You just approach it like any other week," Murray said. "We had a disappointing loss last week but we will learn from it and move on. We have a big challenge coming up."

Zach Ertz, a pretty grounded guy himself, does see the added significance of the task at hand.

"Growing up, you kind of grasp it if you watch the NFL at all that the Eagles and Cowboys are always going to be good and it's gonna be a good game," Ertz said.

Sam Bradford is getting the sense that it's a big deal, too.

"I think I am learning quickly that there is not a lot of love lost between the two sides," the quarterback said. "On our first or second practice they had that banner over the stadium. This is a big game for both teams."

Bradford grew up in Oklahoma, surrounded by Cowboys fans. But surprisingly, he wasn't a big fan of the team as a kid.

"I was actually a little more of a Steelers fan growing up," Bradford recalled. "I was kind of weird. I collected football cards, I had a million Jerome Bettis and Kordell Stewart cards.

"I would say most of my friends back home were Cowboys fans ... but they've all converted to Eagles fans."

IS YOUR POST-WEEK 1 PANIC JUSTIFIED?

The draft is the most important part of your fantasy football season. But not far behind are the decisions you make in the first two weeks.

That's because everything we thought we knew coming into the season now needs to be re-evaluated. We have actual games and data to examine — and even though it's a tiny sample size — it can be more relevant than our offseason takes. For example, owners that gave up on Justin Hunter or went after Justin Forsett hard early last year turned a major profit. Owners that sold low on Eddie Lacy took it on the chin. Some Week 1 notes to act on:

Peyton punished

We can see how the Broncos are going to win games this year. They're going to be dominant defensively, slow the pace of the game and run the football. They won't be throwing when they're up 21 points in the fourth quarter like they used to.

It's a major issue for Peyton Manning's box score and a serious issue for Demaryius Thomas as well. Far less volume and a little less efficiency spells trouble.

Dre Day no more

Some will say it was just an elite Buffalo defense that shut down Andre Johnson in Week 1. I'd say it's more.

The Texans moved on from Johnson this offseason despite having little depth at wideout, a sure sign they thought he was done. That's not a very far-fetched take on a guy who is 34 years old and was never a great red-zone player anyway.

The Donte Moncrief waiver-wire add takes on even greater importance if we look at it through a lens of Johnson's role being vulnerable.

Taking on Tevin

The gap between Falcons rookie Tevin Coleman and second-year man Devonta Freeman continues to widen.

In Week 1, Coleman started and played 45 snaps (20 carries), while Freeman came off the bench for 28 snaps (10 carries). Tevin was far more effective, showing the burst we know he had but also impressively grinding through first contact.

That was the biggest knock on him coming out of Indiana. But with a featured role in a fast-paced offense and explosive big-play ability, Coleman is going to have some huge games.

Pickups of the week

Add these guys off the waiver-wire:

- Donte Moncrief, WR, Colts — T.Y. Hilton has a knee injury and Moncrief is way ahead of Philip Dorsett right now.
- David Johnson, RB, Cardinals — This is a stash play as he'll start off behind Chris Johnson while Andre Ellington (knee) rehabs again.
- James Jones, WR, Packers — Jones isn't good enough for Oakland or the New York Giants, but he's Aaron Rodgers' preferred red-zone target with Jordy Nelson sidelined.

NFL news

We used to know exactly where Richard Sherman would be on every play. He'd line up wide on the left side and shut down whoever came into his area. That changed in Week 1, as Sherman moved all over the formation — including a team-high 13 snaps in the slot. It's bad news for our projection ability and bad news for Packers slot man Randall Cobb in Week 2.

Fantasy sports

Daily fantasy sites under fire

Hours after what was the biggest day in the history of daily fantasy sports, Week 1 of the 2015 NFL season, U.S. Representative Frank Pallone — from New Jersey's Sixth Congressional District — has put a block on the railroad tracks on DraftKings and FanDuel's gravy train.

On the website for the Committee on Energy & Commerce, an ominous press release was posted with the title, "Pallone: How do fantasy sports differ from gambling?"

It says that Pallone has "requested that the Committee hold a hearing to review the legal status of fantasy sports, given the Committee's jurisdiction over professional sports and gambling and the overwhelming popularity of fantasy sports websites."

Translation: Way too many people are having way too much fun and making way too much money.

"Fans are currently allowed to risk money on the performance of an individual player. How is that different than wagering money on the outcome of a game?" said Pallone in the statement.

The statement also questions the relationships between the daily fantasy sites and the NFL, NBA, MLB and NHL: "Involvement of players or league personnel who may be able to affect the outcome of a game also raises additional questions."
